He then looked at Jupiter and saw a wonderful sight. The great planet had four moons traveling round it, just in the same way that the earth and planets travel round the sun. He was delighted with this important discovery, and many people went to look at Jupiter through his telescope. He wrote a book, but as the most powerful people at that time did not believe in his theories he was made a prisoner. As his life was in danger unless he denied that the earth moved, the poor old man was obliged to say he might be wrong. He was set at liberty, but his sight began to fail, and for five years before his death he was blind. He lived to be nearly eighty years of age.--From School Education.
